EVENING.

COME ev'ning, thy soft influence shed Upon my weary, drooping head: Give quiet to this troubled breast And charm the cares of day to rest.

Oft at thy sober, soothing hour I seek the cool, sequester'd bow'r. Higher I come in pensive mood To taste the joys of solitude: To mark the streamlet gliding by, And the steep hill uprising high, Whose pines their lofty heads display, Tint'd by the sun's mild parting ray; To view the cliffs uncouth and tall, To hear the distant waterfall, To drink the music of the grove, The artless harmony of love.

Hail rural shades! With joy I greet Your ever-pleasant, calm retreat, Belov'd by all the wife and good, Their fav'rite with, their blest abode. Retir'd from scenes of strife and noise, Of thorny cares and glittering toys, Far from the wayward, giddy throng Who plod in life's dull path along, In shades like these they often roam, And feel themselves awhile at home.

Here nature to her vot'ry shows Charms which her vot'ry only knows; With sweetest sounds delights his ear, Soft whisp'ring gales and woodnotes clear; Presents her prospects to his view Array'd in beauty ever new, O'er the broad vale attracts his sight To climb the verdant mountain's height, Thence bids his wond'ring thoughts take wing And soar away to nature's king.

Far from the world's perplexing maze, Its idle whims, its vain displays, And witless fashion's hard controul, Here the emancipated soul Life's frauds and emptiness discerns, And to despise its follies learns; Rends gaudy grandeur's then disguise, And discontent beneath descends; For fruitless riches sighs no more, Nor scales the slippery steep of pow'r, Nor envies them who win renown, Nor trembles at the proud man's frown. For soon shall wealth and fame and might Sink, like the setting sun, in night; Ev'n earth herself must soon decay, And all her glory fade away.

And when the light of day retires, And the sweet woodland song expires; While darkness comes with silent pace, And steals each charm from nature's face; Hope leaves this dreary, low sojourn, And mounts, on faith's strong pinions born, Exulting, to that high abode Where all the just behold their God: A land exempt from toil and care, Where spring pervades the boundless year; A land where perfect pleasures grow, (O how unlike the soil below!) Where storms are never heard to roar, And night and woe are known no more.

PHILANDER.

O D E,

Composed for the ninth Anniversary of the "Boston Charitable Fire Society," MAY, 1803.

Kind is the gift of Fire! whose power Man, with restraining art, shall guide, Friend of his dear domestic hour, To all his bosom'd joys allied; While round his Hearth the sparkling ray, Console the shivering stranger's way.

Not for the social scene alone, Was the bright Element design'd; Hence Science claims her radiant throne, And spreads the empire of her mind; And hence mechanic arts arise, Inventive, useful, bold and wise.

But should, with wild, unlicensed sway, The bickering Flame, rebellious, soar, No more the ruling hand obey, Friend of the social scene no more; Wide breaking with disastrous light Full on the curtain'd calm of night;

Around the wealth-embellish'd dome Bloodless the red destroyer flies, Nor spares the poor man's wedded home, Nor heeds the frenzied Parent's cries; Though on her wakening senses steal, All that a Mother's heart can feel.

To soothe, to save, still hovering near, Blest Charity, thy Cares extend,

With kind consolatory tear,

Like the sweet dew of Heaven descend; To each thy healing smiles expand, To all enlarge thy generous hand.

Diffusive as the sun, that glows On every eye with gladdening ray, Refreshing as the breeze, that flows To chase the sickly fiend away, Blessing and blest; loved Power appear, And plant thy rich affections here.

N. E. Palladium.

THE OBSERVER.

Simper honos, nomenq; iurum, landeeq; mahen bunt. VIRGIL.

DIGNITY and elevation of character are objects of frequent pursuit, but of less frequent attainment; National depends upon individual character. The excellence of a musical instrument supposes such construction and adaptation of its several parts, as will best produce the design of the artificer. Destroy a constituent part; the utility and excellence of the instrument will be instantly destroyed. Thus in civil society, if individuals act not their parts on the stage of human life with propriety and order, they destroy that beauty and utility, which are ornaments to humanity.

The importance of obtaining national character, cannot be too frequently enforced; but deserves the calm considerations of enlightened reason. Perhaps this purpose will be best affected by a retrospect view of those ancient States, whose eminence has descended through a long series of ages born on the wings of everlasting fame. Whence did the Athenians and Lacedæmonians derive that lustre which illuminates and astonishes an admiring world? Was this splendor original or affected? It was original. In those states existed nice harmony of parts, and each individual filled the station, for which God designed him. Literature and the fine arts were promoted with assiduity, because they were patronized by men of talents and of property, and equally admired by those in the cabinet and in the field. The contemplative attitude of the statesman, and the intrepid aspect of the warrior, which has been preferred by the chisel of the sculptor, incited the imitation of admiring posterity. Historians were respected and patronized; not, like modern historians, because they disguised truth, but because it was displayed in its native beauty. They knew the objects, of history. By an accurate delineation of illustrious and ignoble characters, they excited imitation and aversion by the powerful arguments of hope and fear. Events, subserving the progress of virtue and freedom, were celebrated by the poet and the historian. In that period no simple Bloomfield described the employments of a plough boy, or the occurrences of a barn yard. Men were too wise to applaud that brainless wit, and egregious nonsense, which in the poems of an English cobbler, have furnished subjects of admiration and applause to the disciples of modern refined simplicity; but of just and unlimited censure to those, who possess the important acquisition of discrimination between the productions of brilliancy and of dullness.

If Columbia desire foreign distinction, and domestic greatness, she must acquire a national character. By the progress of literature and the fine arts, this character will be more readily obtained. Europe boasts with propriety of her scholars, as well as of her statesmen and warriors. How has she attained them? By patronage. Men will not destroy their lives, nor risk their happiness, merely for temporary emolument. The laurels they obtain, must be permanent to be valuable. Distinction is the most powerful stimulus to action. But, unless this distinction be conferred by judgement, learning and wealth, long will "the flower be doomed to bluish unseen," in the vale of obscurity. Although genius disdain beaten paths, yet it will not frequently venture on untried scenes without previous consideration. Rashness characterizes a bravo, who rushes into danger because he is ignorant of its nature. Genius soars with activity and resolution: but not with Daedalus, on waxen wings. The bird of day first exercises his strength by small attempts; when he has tried and discovered his powers, he soars aloft, and is seen no more.

United America is now distinguished by the prevalence of faction and party spirit; and in the opinion of European nations her greatness has sensibly decreased. But we may ardently wish, and rationally expect that she will soon discover the importance of obtaining a national character, unrivalled among the kingdoms of the earth. By promoting arts and sciences she may yet hope to rejoice in the productions of her painters and sculptors, of her poets and historians. May this lustre resemble the bright resplendent orb of day in its permanence and utility. When this national honor shall be once attained, it will be incumbent on all to secure its continuance: lest this renovation resemble that of Russia under Peter the great, which like the light of an electric cloud, increased the horror of the succeeding scene.

ALI KHAN.

From the (Balt.) FEDERAL GAZETTE.

Democratic Shifts.—Were it not for the lamentable consequences which must first or last ensue from the rent made in our constitution, by rendering the judiciary dependent upon one or both of the other branches of government, it would be highly amusing, and a fine subject for exercising the risible powers, to view the ludicrous shifts to which the democrats are sometimes forced to resort in defence of this measure of their adored philosopher. If you defeat them in the field of fair argument, and convince them, even against their wills, that the act was unconstitutional they dodge immediately into some out of the way, ridiculous position, or other, and there attempt to make a stand. A striking instance of such conduct was exhibited a few days since in a discussion between a federalist and a democrat on the anti judiciary law of the last session but one. The latter after finding every argument he could advance in favor of his constitutional policy, completely refuted, at length asserted, that the independence of the judiciary was neither sought for by our revolutionary patriots, nor thought of by the political sages of that day—and that therefore it could not be the intention of the framers of the present constitution, that it should be a separate, independent and co-ordinate branch, or, if such was their design, that it was nugatory inasmuch as it was not the object for which our country fought and bled.

If it be proved that the premises of this zealous democrat are false, his conclusions, at best extremely ridiculous, will at once fall to the ground. Many of the celebrated orators from 1764 down to the adoption of the present constitution, and many of the best writers during that period, classed the dependence of the judiciary amongst those grievances, which brought about the separation of the then colonies from the mother country. But laying all other authority aside for the present, we shall be content with confronting this democratic arguer with the writings of John Dickinson, esq. of Delaware, as a moderate writer and as a timid politician as any of that period; whose republicanism and patriotism, it is presumed, none of the jeff will now demur against. Mr. Dickinson, in order to render the atrocities of the British government more glaring and resistance more necessary, draws a parallel between its measures and those of Philip of Spain in the low countries, which tho' his tyranny separated from his government, and after a memorable contest became the United Provinces of Holland. Philip sent the renowned Alva to be the bloody executor of his arbitrary mandates. So did the British government send lord North. Philip sent a worse engine amongst the Hollanders than Alva and his myrmidons—a batch of new judges, and those absolutely depending on the king.—So, says our author, did the British ministry, and the fruits of such a judiciary are pointed at by him in one of the Rhode Island courts.*

These dependent judges Mr. Dickinson calls "another grievance"—and as it was felt and protested against several years before the revolution commenced, and as nothing occurred during the conflict, to render the dependence of the judges upon the Ministry or parliament, more acceptable in principle or agreeable in practice, is it not a violation of reason and truth to suppose, that when erecting ourselves into an independent REPUBLIC, champions for either could be found amongst those who had drawn their swords against both as a "grievance?"

* See Dickinson's Letters, vol. 1 page 368, and the note.

Too many instances fore and during that ing dragged from the by such judges, from an of 3000 miles, "grievance" as det as any the sword was it to be wondered a doubted—that the fra cellent constitution, "grievance," intend making the judge pe during good behavior of every power and ev peachment for midem ter what they had fee have been acting wor have placed the judic corruptible and immov public and private l sword on the one hand the other. The former executive—the latter and which of them in rience of government is the liberties of the o trusted best with the m a matter of some d will be a tyrant in tur without the interposi pendent judiciary, is a but is confirmed by former colonies, by the United Provinces, and of every country infest vernment.

But we are digressing we set out with, which the ludicrous positions forced into, in their favorite project of their id

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 8.

Peace to be continued.—A gentleman of intelligence and veracity, in St. Domingo, writes to his friend in this city, (Philadelphia) under date of the 11th of May, that a vessel from the French government had just arrived at Martinique and St. Domingo, with assurances from the First Consul to the officers of the Colonial Government, that peace will certainly be continued in Europe. This letter was received by the brig Lilly arrived at Wilmington from St. Domingo. [Gaz. U. States.]

Accounts from Havanna to the 15th ult. (received at New York) state 1000 French troops, had arrived at N. Orleans, and that several vessels had arrived from France with provisions.

Extra of a letter from Cape Francois, dated May 9.

"Every thing remains tranquil here at present, but there is no prospect of a cessation of hostilities.

"The brigands, it is believed, are on some secret expedition, as they have entirely quitted this part of the island; we are apprehensive for the fate of some of our neighbouring ports.

"There are a number of brigand barges out about different parts of this island; the ship May Flower, capt. Logan, was chased close in with this port. Most of the troops which were stationed here have been ordered for Port au Prince till further orders. There is a number of French shipping in port, and daily arrivals. Two French frigates sailed for France on the 5th with all possible dispatch.

"The markets in general are low, except lumber, which is in demand; 45 dollars by the cargo. The town is rapidly rebuilding, and every thing wears a favorable appearance. There are at present in port two 74's, one 64 and two frigates.

"We understand that Clarvo, a distinguished officer among the brigands, is mortally wounded."

The Democrats continually boast their cause as rapidly progressing in the opinions of the people. But in what instance do we receive from them those proofs which might compel us to subscribe to the fact? Will the result of the elections for the next congress, as far as they are known, be admitted amongst the number? Will Virginia, the fostering nurse of Democracy, confirm it? In that state its decline, amongst the people, if we may judge from the number of federal members returned, must be miraculously great. It is not a doubtful fact, that elections in general are decided by the very lower order of voters. It is amongst such as those that the present ruling party seeks approbation; constantly addressing itself to the prejudices, but rarely to the reason of men. Such is always the conduct of those who are not certain that their own clear and disinterested views command the acquiescence and support of the intelligent and discerning. We have therefore heard nothing, from one corner of the U. States to the other, but exultations on the hoodwinking subject of finance; a subject of such intricate nature, that very few indeed are capable of pursuing that delicate train of reasoning, which is necessary to its being fully understood. Statements subtle and complex are multiplied on each other to prove—What? not that the people are released from any oppressive burthen, but that the expenses of the government are diminished—dwindled almost to a span. And thus, by a forged process, is a whole people grossly abused.

No man perhaps, after an election so closely contested, ever entered into office with so much in his favor as Mr. Jefferson: yet in the short space of two years, we behold his popularity in a great measure dying away; and lost too by those very engines which he had employed to secure it. The people were impudently told that they labored under oppressive taxes, created to supply the luxuries, or administer to the ambitious views of a disorderly and designing administration, but that he had released them; that the country was drawn to the brink of destruction by unnecessarily mingling with European politics, but that he had luckily stepped in to ward off the blow which threatened annihilation. Are these things so? No. The revenue has most certainly in some instances been lessened: But has the people at large benefited by that? No. Removing taxes from luxuries, from coaches, &c. brings no relief to the laborer and the mechanic; and it is a certain fact that as soon as the duty was taken from whiskey, its selling value was enhanced from 20 to 30 per cent. Such was the Democratic enthusiasm that nothing else would be used, where other liquors could be had; where they were not attainable, people were obliged to submit to the imposition.

A Virginia waggoner when offered a dram would reject the best foreign spirit and prefer whiskey: because it paid no duty. On the other hand, is the high duty on salt no burthen on the people, who cannot exist without it? But the very circumstance of this and many other articles of import being deemed essential to the comforts of the poorer classes, was the best motive for continuing or increasing the duties on them, they must be had, and this branch of the revenue was consequently certain; and perhaps the only means to 'Wring from the hard hands of peasants their vile trash;' while the vehicles and the comforts of the wealthy were not to be checked by any taxation however light. Yet this no doubt will be called releasing the country from unnecessary burthens. Should we trace the administration through all the reliefs it has afforded to its idol, the people, we should find them in general equally subservient with the foregoing. They are told that great things have been done for them, and the multitude ever credulous, ever prone to be duped, give the tale full confidence.

And is it to Mr. Jefferson we are indebted for the adjustment of our quarrel with France, the only circumstance that can be supposed to have directly misled our interests with the politics of Europe? Certainly not. For that we are indebted to the manly firmness of Mr. Adams, who by the decided measures he adopted, compelled the Great Nation reluctantly to acknowledge our independence. Through him too was the negotiation entered into, and under his auspices conducted to the situation in which Mr. Jefferson found it, when Mr. Dawson was appointed to carry the mere ratification to France. Yet for this is Jefferson bespattered with praises, by those who can find nothing more worthy. He was the honor of commissioning Mr. Dawson to be his messenger to Talleyrand his was the honor of dispatching a national ship, for the double purpose of conveying Mr. Dawson to France, and Thomas Paine, the philosopher, to the United States. Be he praised accordingly!!!

Men of understanding, however they may for a time be led a stray, will at last discover the false doctrines which have misled them, and, where interest or ambition does not step in to stifle the voice of virtue, they will avow their former errors, and warn their fellow citizens against that by which they were themselves deceived. This has been the case in a variety of instances, within these last two years. Men were enamoured of the painted beauties of democracy, which at a distance promised so much bliss, such rapturous enjoyment; but when they approached, wooed, and hoped by gaining her to revel in delights, they found her a very coquette, who held lures to draw them into her train, and then mock the slavery to which she had reduced them.

To warrant this remark, we have almost daily instances of profound natural and acquired talents, repenting of their long adherence to erroneous opinions; and, not contented with simple renunciation, coming forward before the public, to justify their abjuration, on the ground of indefeasible reason. Deceived by wild romantic theory, they have been undeceived by serious, melancholy, and contradictory practice. A youthful imagination, glowing with ingenious ardor, fresh from the schools, and full of the ideal schemes of idle philosophers; charmed by the imposing names of illustrious Greeks and Romans, who died combating the tyranny of others, that they might the more easily establish their own; will grasp with alacrity any thing bearing the name of liberty; a talismanic word, which the college student is taught to iterate without comprehending, to worship without considering how seldom its earthly altar can assert even the slightest claim to divine honors; but which the reflecting mind learns to estimate by its application and the good it procures; not by the glare of meteoric ornaments.

Maryland can produce many converts, from the aberrations of democracy to the wholesome and orthodox doctrines of federalism. Among these stand foremost two enlightened young men. Mr. Philip T. Baker, and Mr. Ch. H. W. Wharton—whose letters are the strongest testimony to the pure motives of their authors. Such men as these candor is proud to acknowledge, and liberty delights to boast of.

The world was taught by the democrats that liberty was totally fled the United States, at the close of the last administration; and that nothing but the election of a philosophical statesman, nothing but the appointment of Mr. Jefferson, could entice the wandering Goddess to return. Who would not sacrifice every thing to obtain such a blessing? The experiment was made; the enchanter, the motion of whose wand was to be followed by such innumerable joys, has been placed in the chair. Has the effect been produced according to expectation? Have we more liberty than we had before? 'The evils that men do live after them.' The mist will one day be removed from before men's eyes; they may then perhaps be able to discover what a noble monument the present administration is erecting to perpetuate its own memory. [Anti Demo.]

Description of a farce acted by all Mankind.

The world is a theatre; mankind are the comedians; chance composes the piece, and Fortune distributes the parts, theologians, and politicians govern the machines; and philosophers are the spectators. The rich take their places in the pit and upper boxes, the powerful in the front and sides, and the galleries are for the poor. The women distribute fruit and refreshments, and the unfortunate snuff the candles. Folly composes the overture, and time draws the curtain. The title of the piece is Mundus vult decipi, ergo decipitur—"If the world will be deceived, let it be so." The opening of the farce begins with sighs, and fears: The first act abounds with the chimerical projects of men:—The frantic testify their applause with re-echoed bravoes, whilst the sagacious bring their catcalls into play to damn the performance. At going in, a sort of money called trouble, and in exchange a ticket is given, subscribed uncertainty, in order to obtain a place. The variety of objects which appear for a short time divert the spectators; but the unravelling of the plot and intrigues will well or ill concerted, force the risible muscles of the philosophers.

We see giants who presently become pigmies, and dwarfs who imperceptibly attain a monstrous height. There we see men exerting all their efforts in the pursuit of the eligible plans, guided by prudence and armed with precaution, who are nevertheless, circumvented in all their pursuits and frustrated in all their endeavors; whilst here we observe a group of indolent, careless fellows, who attain the highest summit of mundane felicity. Such is the farce of this world, and he who would choose to divert himself with it at his leisure, should take his place in some obscure corner where he may unobserved be a spectator of the whole performance, and in safety laugh at it as it deserves. A VALUABLE MILL FOR SALE.

THE subscriber wishes to sell his MILL, known by the name of Clifton Mill, within two and an half miles of Dumfries, on the waters of Quantico, which is as constant a stream as any in this part of the country, and in an exceeding healthy situation; very conveniently situated to a fine wheat country,
not being more than half a mile out of the way,
in going to Dumfries, from the main road leading from Fauquier Court House, Centerville, &c. (and by some thought not any out of the way at all) and a very good road to it. There are, if the purchaser chooses, 227½ acres of land which may go with the mill, (except one acre which will be reserved) or a smaller quantity as may be agreed on. The mill is an over-shot, with a wheel of 20 feet 9 inches and 4 feet head, with two pair of stones. One pair of French burrs of 5 feet, the other of Cologne, with every apparatus necessary for carrying on merchant business to the best advantage. The mill house is fifty feet long and twenty seven feet wide, two stories high, with a small kiln for drying corn, together with a barn, stable, cow house and lumber house, convenient to the mill. A convenient dwelling house, (not quite finished) with a kitchen, meat and corn house; the whole of which have been built within 7 years past. There are two very thriving young orchards of peach and other fruit trees. It was supposed, had not the frost killed the fruit this spring, upwards of 100 gallons of brandy might have been made from them. Should the whole of the land be required with the mill, there is another small house,
kitchen and meat house, at a short distance from the former.

The situation of this property must render it a desirable acquisition to any person inclined to engage in this line of business; particularly so as it is situated to near tide water. It is deemed unnecessary to say any thing more respecting the premises, as it is presumed any person inclined to purchase would wish to see them. Nothing would induce me to part with this valuable property, but the pressing demands against me which I am anxious to discharge, therefore a great bargain may be expected. Any further information may be known on application to JOHN SOWDEN, Clifton Mill.
Dumfries, May 27. 2aw4w.

Mrs. COOKE,

Has the honor of informing
her friends, and the inhabitants in general, of Alexandria and its vicinity, that she has opened a School for young Ladies, next door to the corner of Prince and Washington streets, and hopes to experience a continuance of the liberal and generous patronage, which she has hitherto received, and of which she will ever make it her study to be thought deserving.

Mrs. Cooke purposes to engage a select number of Pupils, for whom, when complete, she will procure Teachers of approved abilities to perfect them in those branches of literature, which their parents or guardians may wish them to attain.

Young Ladies, residing at a distance
from School, boarded by the day or week during the warm season. A few yearly boarders will be received on moderate
terms, to be made known at the school.
